

THE CHINOOK ADVANCE

Vol. 22

Chinook, Alberta, Thursday, Jan. 26th 1939

No.

Continued from Back Page

In Edmonton. The furniture made by these families will be used by other families under our rehabilitation plan. Other articles so made will be sold and all the money received will be distributed among the families responsible for their manufacture.

A total of about 2,000 single homeless men, many of whom are not a responsibility of the Alberta Government, were given work under a Dominion - Provincial program. Each government contributed 50 per cent of this cost but the work was found and administered by the Provincial Government. It operated from April 1st to July 31st, 1937, at which time the Dominion agreement terminated. The average cost of the work was $65.00 per man per month. Each man was given a portion of his earnings during the term of his employment but a portion of his earnings was retained by the government and was later made available to him in monthly instalments payable at any point in western Canada.

Under the Dominion-Provincial Farm Placement Plan 4,415 single homeless men were placed on farms — the Dominion and Provincial Governments sharing the cost equally. The average cost to the Province for men in depots or recreation camps was approximately $12.00 per man per month. Under the Farm Placement Plan the cost, including clothing and transportation, payment of $5.00 per month to the man and a bonus $5.00 to the farmer was approximately the same as the cost of keeping a man in a depot but the Farm Placement Plan proved more advantageous in many ways and the Dominion Government shared half the cost — a share not borne for men in depots.

LOCAL NEWS

Mr. E. Sawyer, employee of the Service Garage, who has been attending the Ford School at Calgary, returned this week.

Mr. Wanner, the new elevator manager who is taking over the Pool Elevator following the decease of Mr. Hocari, arrived here Tuesday and has taken up residence in the house owned by W. H. Meade. Mr. Wanner comes from Arneson, where he has been in charge of the Pool Elevator. We welcome Mr. and Mrs. Wanner to Chinook.

Mr. J. Ray Robison who attended the U. F. A. Convention at Calgary, as delegate from the Chinook district, returned home Sunday.

Mr. R. Stewart, and son Harold of Brooks, are Chinook visitors this week.

Mr. J. M. Davis left Sunday morning for Drumheller, where he spent a few days also visiting other points and returning Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Petersen, north of town, entertained a number of friends to dinner Sunday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. H. Stewart, of Brooks, on Friday, Jan. 13th, a daughter.

RECITAL

A humorous and dramatic recital by Miss Theresa M. Siegal, a graduate of the Chaffie Noble School, Detroit, will be held in Auditorium of the Chinook School, on Saturday, February 4th at 8:15 P. M.

It is put on under the auspices of the Chinook High School in aid of an educational trip to Calgary.

Admission: Adults .25c
Children .15c
or 2 for .25c

No doubt you have noticed the absence of the Round About Town news of late. We regret to lose our correspondent, who felt she would have to discontinue sending same, when it became known who the correspondent was. We are hoping to secure the services of one in the near future.

Our fine winter weather still continues, and we feel as if the winter has yet to come,

Protect yourself against Colds

Buckley Cough Mixture	.40c bottle
Pinex	.50c "
Eno Fruit Salts	.85c "
Listerine	.60c "
Mentholatum	.60c "
Hame Straps, Harness, Leather, Rivets, Harness thread & Needles, Wax, Snaps, and Buckles.

BANNER HARDWARE AND GROCERIES

YOUNGSTOWN

OBITUARY

The residents of Youngstown and District were shocked to learn of the death of Mr. Andrew Erickson on Friday, January 20th at the Hanna Hospital. Death came suddenly after a short illness.

Mr. Erickson was in his 60th year having been born on July 19th, 1879. He homesteaded in 1909; being an energetic man and built a comfortable home and commenced residence in 1910. Mr. Erickson took an interested part in all activities of the community. In his passing Youngstown district loses one of its foremost residents.

Funeral Services took place in the United Church in Youngstown on Tuesday, January 24th at 2:00 p. m. Rev. H. A. Whaley officiating. Interment was in the Youngstown Cemetery.

He leaves to mourn his passing, his widow, one daughter, Mrs. E. Van Dam, of Youngstown, and two brothers, Ole in North Dakota and Nels of Rose Valley, Sask.

Floral tributes were received from the following:

The family
Larson & Mellom Families
Mr. and Mrs. D. Disham
Mr. Disham sr. & Miss Disham and Mrs. Hein
Mr. and Mrs. H. Rudy
Mr. and Mrs. Van Dam
Mr. Newgard
Mrs. McArthur
Mr. & Mrs. Beckland
Mr. and Mrs. Rutz
The Falconer Family and Miss Crowe
Members of the Cando U. F. A.

All lines of Fresh and Cured meats including Hamburger and home-made Sausage. Poultry supplies, and laying mash for winter egg production. Fresh frozen Fish at Winter prices.

LICENSED
Buyers of Hides & Horse Hair
at Market Prices
Chinook Meat Market

Shoe Repairing

Watch and Clock Repairs

Painting, Plastering, Carpentering & Paper Hanging
Prices Reasonable

W. J. Gallagher

1st Door North of Hotel

EXCURSIONS to the PACIFIC COAST

Visit VANCOUVER
VICTORIA
PRINCE RUPERT
SEATTLE
PORTLAND
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES

LOW FARES on sale daily to May 15th. Also specially reduced fares on sale to February 28th between certain points in Canada.

Generous Return Limits and Stop-over privileges.

Travel in Air-Conditioned Comfort
Attractive meals at moderate cost in the dining car. Also special tray service available to Coach and Tourist Car passengers.

Full particulars from your local agent.

CANADIAN NATIONAL

Mortgagee to the Rescue

When the history of western farm rehabilitation comes to be written, much credit will have to be given to the frequently maligned mortgageholder.

While avoiding pouring good money after bad, the big lending companies have repeatedly come to the assistance of the debtor. Aside from sweeping debt adjustment over large areas in which insurance and mortgage institutions have voluntarily taken interest cuts running into many millions of dollars, there have been thousands of individual settlements of which the public has heard little or nothing.

ACTS FAST TO BRING RELIEF FROM COLDS

This Simple Way Eases
Pain and Discomfort and
Sore Throat Accompanying
Colds with Amazing Speed

1. To ease pain and discomfort and reduce fever take 2 "Aspirin" Tablets in 15 minutes of drink a glass of water. Repeat in 2 hours.

2. If throat is raw from cold, cough and discomf take 2 "Aspirin" Tablets in 15 minutes of drink a glass of water. Repeat in 2 hours.

Just Be Sure You Use
"Aspirin"—Do it the Moment
You Feel a Cold Coming on

The simple way pictured above often brings amazingly fast relief from discomfort and sore throat accompanying colds.

Try it. Then—see your doctor. He probably will tell you to continue with "Aspirin" because it acts so fast to relieve discomforts of a cold. And to reduce fever.

This simple way, backed by scientific authority, has largely supplanted the use of strong medicines in easing cold symptoms. Perhaps the easiest, most effective way yet discovered.

Demand and Get
"ASPIRIN"
TRADE-MARK REG.

POOR MAN'S GOLD
Courtney
Ryley Cooper

CHAPTER XI.—Continued

"Got fire fighting equipment?"
"Plenty."

"Hose and lankage?"
"Yeh—and dynamite. Been bringing up a lot of Indians from around Tadla lake—they they set enough fire down in that region so they can get paid for putting them out."

They were at quite an altitude, but still in fog.

"This smoke goes up plenty high," Hammond said. Even as he mentioned it, he became aware that the air had cleared, that he was breathing deeply for the first time that day. The ranger leaned closer.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

The airplane dropped down through the soupy sky to a comparatively gentle landing. Hammond opened the cabin door and leaned out over the spray of the pontoons, as the plane taxied to shore.

The life rafts were beached, empty. Men, and a few women, were lugging possessions out of the shalows, and moving with them through the driving snow, which steadily became heavier, toward the blackened expanse that once had been Sapphir. Already a few tents were rising. Life had begun anew.

A woman called out to Hammond. "Hey! What's the trouble?"

It was Around the World Annie, in char-smugged shirt and breeks. Her boots were muddy.

"Got a burnt man in the cabin," he answered.

"Thought so. No use stopping here. Taxi around to the inlet. They're using my place."

Jack started.

"But I've got a burnt man."

"Ain't there plenty up there like him?" yelled Annie. "What's eatin' on you? Who've you got?"

"Bruce Kenning. He's in bad shape."

Annie turned, and with a hooked arm, halted a passing miner.

"Do tell that Joyce girl they've found her lover," she commanded. "She's been wmin' around this camp half nuts."

Hour after hour, into the deep night and again to daylight, the dogged task continued with short respites for rest as the light changed. Dynamite boomed and trees crashed to earth. Long, ragged lines of men, gasping for clean air, waving wet sacks monotonously, attacked the smoldering earth.

The air grew hotter, more horrible. But suddenly Hammond paused in his commands and looked up, blinking. He put out his hand, swiftly retrieving it, close to his eyes.

"Snow!" he shouted. "It's started to snow. Keep going fellows! We've got to help from upstairs!"

An outcry from the gang joined his call. Snow! Now the flakes were thicker and the wind was sharper, with the peaty wet chill of approaching freeze-up. A thrill went through Hammond, as quickly, however, to change to apprehension.

There was a possibility of fatality in all this. If gangs should quit, believing a blizzard imminent, and it should prove only a flurry, then the grueling labors of 48 hours would be lost. Jack started on a circuit of his workers.

The hose gang were still at it, the manpower pumps going faithfully, pulling the water by easy stages from the lake into canvas collapsible tanks, there to be pumped out again to more tanks and finally to the reaches of the fire. Here a sack crew worked diligently, there a gang of axmen, their faces muffled in wet cloths, valked amid smoldering embers, where they might feel threatened by trees and bring an end to the menace of tree-top explosions. But at last he sighted a group of kids men at the bank of the Big Moose.

The forest once had run to the river's edge here; now it was seared and blackened. Logs still smoked, the baked earth steamed with the thickening of the snowfall. Certainly here was no place to relax labors.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

The airplane dropped down through the soupy sky to a comparatively gentle landing. Hammond opened the cabin door and leaned out over the spray of the pontoons, as the plane taxied to shore.

The life rafts were beached, empty. Men, and a few women, were lugging possessions out of the shalows, and moving with them through the driving snow, which steadily became heavier, toward the blackened expanse that once had been Sapphir. Already a few tents were rising. Life had begun anew.

A woman called out to Hammond. "Hey! What's the trouble?"

It was Around the World Annie, in char-smugged shirt and breeks. Her boots were muddy.

"Got a burnt man in the cabin," he answered.

"Thought so. No use stopping here. Taxi around to the inlet. They're using my place."

Jack started.

"But I've got a burnt man."

"Ain't there plenty up there like him?" yelled Annie. "What's eatin' on you? Who've you got?"

"Bruce Kenning. He's in bad shape."

Annie turned, and with a hooked arm, halted a passing miner.

"Do tell that Joyce girl they've found her lover," she commanded. "She's been wmin' around this camp half nuts."

Hour after hour, into the deep night and again to daylight, the dogged task continued with short respites for rest as the light changed. Dynamite boomed and trees crashed to earth. Long, ragged lines of men, gasping for clean air, waving wet sacks monotonously, attacked the smoldering earth.

The air grew hotter, more horrible. But suddenly Hammond paused in his commands and looked up, blinking. He put out his hand, swiftly retrieving it, close to his eyes.

"Snow!" he shouted. "It's started to snow. Keep going fellows! We've got to help from upstairs!"

An outcry from the gang joined his call. Snow! Now the flakes were thicker and the wind was sharper, with the peaty wet chill of approaching freeze-up. A thrill went through Hammond, as quickly, however, to change to apprehension.

There was a possibility of fatality in all this. If gangs should quit, believing a blizzard imminent, and it should prove only a flurry, then the grueling labors of 48 hours would be lost. Jack started on a circuit of his workers.

The hose gang were still at it, the manpower pumps going faithfully, pulling the water by easy stages from the lake into canvas collapsible tanks, there to be pumped out again to more tanks and finally to the reaches of the fire. Here a sack crew worked diligently, there a gang of axmen, their faces muffled in wet cloths, valked amid smoldering embers, where they might feel threatened by trees and bring an end to the menace of tree-top explosions. But at last he sighted a group of kids men at the bank of the Big Moose.

The forest once had run to the river's edge here; now it was seared and blackened. Logs still smoked, the baked earth steamed with the thickening of the snowfall. Certainly here was no place to relax labors.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

The airplane dropped down through the soupy sky to a comparatively gentle landing. Hammond opened the cabin door and leaned out over the spray of the pontoons, as the plane taxied to shore.

The life rafts were beached, empty. Men, and a few women, were lugging possessions out of the shalows, and moving with them through the driving snow, which steadily became heavier, toward the blackened expanse that once had been Sapphir. Already a few tents were rising. Life had begun anew.

A woman called out to Hammond. "Hey! What's the trouble?"

It was Around the World Annie, in char-smugged shirt and breeks. Her boots were muddy.

"Got a burnt man in the cabin," he answered.

"Thought so. No use stopping here. Taxi around to the inlet. They're using my place."

Jack started.

"But I've got a burnt man."

"Ain't there plenty up there like him?" yelled Annie. "What's eatin' on you? Who've you got?"

"Bruce Kenning. He's in bad shape."

Annie turned, and with a hooked arm, halted a passing miner.

"Do tell that Joyce girl they've found her lover," she commanded. "She's been wmin' around this camp half nuts."

Hour after hour, into the deep night and again to daylight, the dogged task continued with short respites for rest as the light changed. Dynamite boomed and trees crashed to earth. Long, ragged lines of men, gasping for clean air, waving wet sacks monotonously, attacked the smoldering earth.

The air grew hotter, more horrible. But suddenly Hammond paused in his commands and looked up, blinking. He put out his hand, swiftly retrieving it, close to his eyes.

"Snow!" he shouted. "It's started to snow. Keep going fellows! We've got to help from upstairs!"

An outcry from the gang joined his call. Snow! Now the flakes were thicker and the wind was sharper, with the peaty wet chill of approaching freeze-up. A thrill went through Hammond, as quickly, however, to change to apprehension.

There was a possibility of fatality in all this. If gangs should quit, believing a blizzard imminent, and it should prove only a flurry, then the grueling labors of 48 hours would be lost. Jack started on a circuit of his workers.

The hose gang were still at it, the manpower pumps going faithfully, pulling the water by easy stages from the lake into canvas collapsible tanks, there to be pumped out again to more tanks and finally to the reaches of the fire. Here a sack crew worked diligently, there a gang of axmen, their faces muffled in wet cloths, valked amid smoldering embers, where they might feel threatened by trees and bring an end to the menace of tree-top explosions. But at last he sighted a group of kids men at the bank of the Big Moose.

The forest once had run to the river's edge here; now it was seared and blackened. Logs still smoked, the baked earth steamed with the thickening of the snowfall. Certainly here was no place to relax labors.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

The airplane dropped down through the soupy sky to a comparatively gentle landing. Hammond opened the cabin door and leaned out over the spray of the pontoons, as the plane taxied to shore.

The life rafts were beached, empty. Men, and a few women, were lugging possessions out of the shalows, and moving with them through the driving snow, which steadily became heavier, toward the blackened expanse that once had been Sapphir. Already a few tents were rising. Life had begun anew.

A woman called out to Hammond. "Hey! What's the trouble?"

It was Around the World Annie, in char-smugged shirt and breeks. Her boots were muddy.

"Got a burnt man in the cabin," he answered.

"Thought so. No use stopping here. Taxi around to the inlet. They're using my place."

Jack started.

"But I've got a burnt man."

"Ain't there plenty up there like him?" yelled Annie. "What's eatin' on you? Who've you got?"

"Bruce Kenning. He's in bad shape."

Annie turned, and with a hooked arm, halted a passing miner.

"Do tell that Joyce girl they've found her lover," she commanded. "She's been wmin' around this camp half nuts."

Hour after hour, into the deep night and again to daylight, the dogged task continued with short respites for rest as the light changed. Dynamite boomed and trees crashed to earth. Long, ragged lines of men, gasping for clean air, waving wet sacks monotonously, attacked the smoldering earth.

The air grew hotter, more horrible. But suddenly Hammond paused in his commands and looked up, blinking. He put out his hand, swiftly retrieving it, close to his eyes.

"Snow!" he shouted. "It's started to snow. Keep going fellows! We've got to help from upstairs!"

An outcry from the gang joined his call. Snow! Now the flakes were thicker and the wind was sharper, with the peaty wet chill of approaching freeze-up. A thrill went through Hammond, as quickly, however, to change to apprehension.

There was a possibility of fatality in all this. If gangs should quit, believing a blizzard imminent, and it should prove only a flurry, then the grueling labors of 48 hours would be lost. Jack started on a circuit of his workers.

The hose gang were still at it, the manpower pumps going faithfully, pulling the water by easy stages from the lake into canvas collapsible tanks, there to be pumped out again to more tanks and finally to the reaches of the fire. Here a sack crew worked diligently, there a gang of axmen, their faces muffled in wet cloths, valked amid smoldering embers, where they might feel threatened by trees and bring an end to the menace of tree-top explosions. But at last he sighted a group of kids men at the bank of the Big Moose.

The forest once had run to the river's edge here; now it was seared and blackened. Logs still smoked, the baked earth steamed with the thickening of the snowfall. Certainly here was no place to relax labors.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

The airplane dropped down through the soupy sky to a comparatively gentle landing. Hammond opened the cabin door and leaned out over the spray of the pontoons, as the plane taxied to shore.

The life rafts were beached, empty. Men, and a few women, were lugging possessions out of the shalows, and moving with them through the driving snow, which steadily became heavier, toward the blackened expanse that once had been Sapphir. Already a few tents were rising. Life had begun anew.

A woman called out to Hammond. "Hey! What's the trouble?"

It was Around the World Annie, in char-smugged shirt and breeks. Her boots were muddy.

"Got a burnt man in the cabin," he answered.

"Thought so. No use stopping here. Taxi around to the inlet. They're using my place."

Jack started.

"But I've got a burnt man."

"Ain't there plenty up there like him?" yelled Annie. "What's eatin' on you? Who've you got?"

"Bruce Kenning. He's in bad shape."

Annie turned, and with a hooked arm, halted a passing miner.

"Do tell that Joyce girl they've found her lover," she commanded. "She's been wmin' around this camp half nuts."

Hour after hour, into the deep night and again to daylight, the dogged task continued with short respites for rest as the light changed. Dynamite boomed and trees crashed to earth. Long, ragged lines of men, gasping for clean air, waving wet sacks monotonously, attacked the smoldering earth.

The air grew hotter, more horrible. But suddenly Hammond paused in his commands and looked up, blinking. He put out his hand, swiftly retrieving it, close to his eyes.

"Snow!" he shouted. "It's started to snow. Keep going fellows! We've got to help from upstairs!"

An outcry from the gang joined his call. Snow! Now the flakes were thicker and the wind was sharper, with the peaty wet chill of approaching freeze-up. A thrill went through Hammond, as quickly, however, to change to apprehension.

There was a possibility of fatality in all this. If gangs should quit, believing a blizzard imminent, and it should prove only a flurry, then the grueling labors of 48 hours would be lost. Jack started on a circuit of his workers.

The hose gang were still at it, the manpower pumps going faithfully, pulling the water by easy stages from the lake into canvas collapsible tanks, there to be pumped out again to more tanks and finally to the reaches of the fire. Here a sack crew worked diligently, there a gang of axmen, their faces muffled in wet cloths, valked amid smoldering embers, where they might feel threatened by trees and bring an end to the menace of tree-top explosions. But at last he sighted a group of kids men at the bank of the Big Moose.

The forest once had run to the river's edge here; now it was seared and blackened. Logs still smoked, the baked earth steamed with the thickening of the snowfall. Certainly here was no place to relax labors.

"What's wrong with you?" Jack shouted. "This fire isn't over."

A Tadla Indian turned out with a short arm gesture motioned him closer. Then a white man called: "Better come down here."

Hammond obeyed, staring at what he saw. On the ground was the charred body of a man, his clothing burned away.

"Dead?" Hammond asked. There was a queer tremble of his voice.

"That's the hell of it," a firefighter answered. "The poor devil's still living."

The victim lay face downward, distorted mouth open. Hammond went to his knees and gently turned the man on his back.

"I thought so," he said jerkily. It was Bruce Kenning.

Durned, horribly so, the man still was recognizable. Hammond reached for his gloves and dusted the dirt out of the man's eyes; they were uninjured. The eyes moved, in a manner which hurt Jack to watch. There was no sound, not even an action of the lips. They were too swollen, too cracked, too flaccid in the hugely enlarged and dusted mouth of agony; the enlarged tongue, pressed tightly motionless against seared palate, told the story.

"Some of you fellows better strip off your coats and cut some poles," he commanded. "Make a stretcher and take him out to the lake. I'll get him back to camp in the p.m."

High in the air, Hammond leaned over the man, relighting in his hate. It seemed cruel that Kenning must cling to life. There was not even the alleviation of being able to groan; he made no sound save a throaty sort of gurgling. Only his eyes, fervent, terribly expressive, told of his suffering.

CHINOOK UNITED CHURCH

Sunday School at 2:45 p m
Mr. Charyk, M. A. Supt

Church Service will be held next Sunday at 1:45 p m

Rev. Mr. Whaley
Youngstown

See E. Robinson

For DRAYING
Or TRUCKING
Any Kind
Satisfaction
Guaranteed

RESTAURANT and ROOMS

Meals at all hours
All Kinds Tobacco
and Cigarettes

Fresh OYSTERS
SOFT DRINKS and Confectionary
Ice Cream
Bricks

MAH BROS.

COMPLETE YOUR
TRAVEL ARRANGEMENTS AND BUY YOUR
Steamship and Rail Tickets
FROM THE
LOCAL AGENT
CANADIAN NATIONAL
Rail and Steamship Lines
1. All Ports of the World

*"Young Man -
I THINK YOU'VE GOT SOMETHING THERE!"*

Grandma always was a keen shopper and quick to "snap up" a bargain ... but you'll recognize these BARGAIN OFFERS without her years of experience ... you save real money ... you get a swell selection of magazines and a full year of our newspaper. That's what we call a "break" for you readers ... no wonder grandma says - "YOU'VE GOT SOMETHING THERE!"

ALL-FAMILY OFFER

This Newspaper, 1 Year, and Any Three Magazines
CHECK THREE MAGAZINES - ENCLOSE WITH ORDER

- | | |
|--|--|
| [] Western Producer, 1 yr. | [] Family Herald and Weekly Star, 1 yr. |
| [] Canadian Magazine, 1 yr. | [] Red and Gun, 1 yr. |
| [] National Home Monthly, 1 yr. | [] Silver Screen, 1 yr. |
| [] Woman's Home Companion, 1 yr. | [] Parents, 8 mos. |
| [] Pictorial Review, 1 yr. | [] American Boy, 8 mos. |
| [] Canadian Horticulture & Home Magazine, 1 yr. | [] Christian Herald, 8 mos. |
| [] Country Guide and Northwest Farmer, 2 yrs. | [] Open Road (boys), 1 yr. |

ALL FOUR
ONLY
2.50

SUPER-VALUE OFFER

This Newspaper, 1 Year, and Three Big Magazines

- | | |
|-------------------------------|--|
| GROUP A—Select 1 | GROUP B—Select 2 |
| [] Women's Home Comp., 1 yr. | [] Canadian Magazine, 1 yr. |
| [] Newsweek, 8 mos. | [] National Home Monthly, 1 yr. |
| [] True Story, 1 yr. | [] Pictorial Review, 1 yr. |
| [] McCall's Magazine, 1 yr. | [] Red and Gun, 1 yr. |
| [] Screenland, 1 yr. | [] Silver Screen, 1 yr. |
| [] The Judge, 1 yr. | [] Pam. Herald & Weekly Star, 1 yr. |
| [] Collins Weekly, 6 mos. | [] Western Producer, 1 yr. |
| [] Magazine Digest, 6 mos. | [] Open Road (boys), 1 yr. |
| [] Parents, 1 yr. | [] Canadian Horticulture & Home Magazine, 1 yr. |
| [] Christian Herald, 1 yr. | [] Country Guide and Northwest Farmer, 2 yrs. |

ALL FOUR
ONLY
3.10

This Newspaper and Any Magazine
— 3 for the Price Shown.

- | |
|---|
| [] Family Herald & Weekly Star, 1 yr. $ 2.00 |
| [] Canadian Magazine, 1 yr. 2.00 |
| [] National Home Monthly, 1 yr. 2.00 |
| [] Western Producer, 1 yr. 2.00 |
| [] Pictorial Review, 1 yr. 2.00 |
| [] Collins Weekly, 1 yr. 2.50 |
| [] American Magazine, 1 yr. 2.00 |
| [] True Story, 1 yr. 2.15 |
| [] Magazine Digest, 1 yr. 3.45 |
| [] Red Book, 1 yr. 2.55 |
| [] Newsweek, 1 yr. 4.45 |
| [] Physical Culture, 1 yr. 2.05 |
| [] Christian Herald, 1 yr. 2.50 |
| [] Country Guide and Northwest Farmer, 3 yrs. 2.70 |
| [] Women's Home Companion, 1 yr. 2.00 |

ALL-OUT COUPON - MAIL TODAY

Please clip list of magazines after checking ones desired.
Fill out coupon carefully.

Gentlemen: I enclose $ _____ I am checking below the offer desired with a year's subscription to your paper.

[] Super-Value [] All-Family [] Single Magazine

Name _____

Post Office _____

R.R. _____ Province _____

Birthday Party

On Sunday evening a party of fifteen made up a Surprise party in honor of Miss Florence Barros whose birthday it was. After a skating party, games were played in the dining room causing great amusement to those present.

After games a large birthday cake was cut by the guest of honor.

THE LADIES' CARD CLUB MET TUESDAY

The Ladies Card Club met Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Wilson. Honors went to Mrs. Lee and Miss Otto. Mrs. L. Cooley will entertain the club next week.

The un advertised product in Canada is a pre destined failure.

Last Sunday the bus broke down on the return journey, necessitating a relief bus while the regular bus was being repaired at Cooley's Garage.

A group of young folks gathered at the Gullaxson Ranch on Wednesday, Jan. 25 to bid farewell to Bruce Barros who has taken a prominent part in the sport circle of Chinook

We all regret very much the departure of our friend. A very enjoyable evening was spent by all.

GOVERNMENT of the PROVINCE of ALBERTA

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLICITY

Publicity Director

DAN E. C. CAMPBELL,

widely known newspaperman, former editor of Texaco News Flashes; who has been appointed publicity director for the Province. Hon. E. C. Manning, in announcing the appointment, stated that the new bureau would not function as a "propaganda bureau" but was intended to get into the hands of the public accurate and authentic information. The Minister announced appointment of MacKay and Savary Advertising Service as advertising agents to the government.

Approximately 71,500 persons within Alberta received relief money totalling $5,740,886.55 during the fiscal year 1937-38. The 71,500 persons included families and single homeless unemployed who applied for and received relief. The gross cost included direct relief exclusive of agriculture and farm settlement projects. The cost of administering this work was $163,829.88 or only 2.85 per cent of the total.

In addition to relief included in these figures, certain work programs were undertaken and provided wages in lieu of relief. Under these programs, 2,155 families representing 10,775 persons, earned an average of $86.00 per family. These families went off relief while they were working but were given further assistance afterward if they needed it. These persons who would have been eligible for relief had it not been for the work programs, produced 32,300 rail ways ties for railway relief contracts; 2,400 telephone poles; 358,129 lineal feet of piling and guaro rails, and 6,200,000 board feet of manufactured dimension lumber. The sale of this material did not interfere in any way with Alberta markets because the railway ties were for use in other parts of Canada and the telephone poles, piling and lumber provided, from local sources, materials which would have been imported had the work programs not been undertaken.

The relief costs for maintenance of transient families, which are a charge of the Provincial Government, could be cut virtually in half if these families could be placed on the land. A recent survey shows that the Government has at its disposal approximately 5,000 farm homes of which 200 are now available and in good shape. There are 908 transient families on Provincial relief. Of these 338 are in Edmonton; 236 in Calgary and 314 elsewhere throughout the Province.

The Government is prepared to place these families in farm homes already established; to continue to pay rent and taxes for these homes; to supply each family with a cow, some pigs, poultry and other assistance when each family demonstrates that it is able to care for such stock and to continue, in short, the government's relief policy for transient families until each family has become self supporting. We feel that many families, if they would take advantage of our farm settlement plan, could be self supporting in two years' but experience has proven that if they remain in cities it is most difficult for them to become self supporting. The cost of administering this work was $163,829.88 or only 2.85 per cent of the total.

Vocational training and instruction in the manufacture of furniture, baskets and other household fixtures was given to 160 families

Continued on Front Page

CHINOOK HOTEL

Try Our Meals
GOOD ROOMS
at reasonable price
DANCE

Friday Night, Jan. 27th.

stay with
ALBERTA
BEER
IN 1939

BRANDS of the ALBERTA BREWING INDUSTRY

This Advertisement is Not Inserted by the Alberta Liquor Control Board or by the Government of the Province of Alberta.